chair and the time come together.

In furnishing a house or choosing a new match thought and care should be expended upon the kitchen. Here is the crux of the family happiness, the source of health and good spirits—too often its beauty and convenience are matters of little forethought—an airy, bright, well-ventilated kitchen with shelves, drawers, tables, and stoves in positions which are the triumph of perfection as far as convenience and time-saving are concerned. There is no reason why a kitchen should not be a pleasant place, yet it is usually the junkshop for all the old, broken-down furniture and utensils in the house. Dirty, dirty broom, ugly tin and granite dishes on the walls, and behind the stove dirt and dampness, make a happy hunting ground for beetles and bugs. This is the horror of neat housewives with sanitary ambitions.

The walls of a kitchen should be of varnished or painted plaster, or covered with a heavy glazed paper such as are used in bathrooms. A wainscot of tiles or varnished wood saves the plaster where it is likely to get many knocks, and should be protected at the base by a narrow baseboard, fitting tightly so that no cracks can admit objectionable visitors from the neighboring flats. Floors should be covered with a good linoleum, unless the architect has put in tiles, which are the ideal flooring. A painted wood surface would be satisfactory if it did not need constant renewing, as the use of scrubbing brushes and soap soon washes it off.

Plenty of shelves and drawers, or a patent kitchen cabinet are great helps to the woman whose time is spent in cooking.

The old-fashioned dolman has been revived and is here in all its pristine glory, as shapeless and ungraceful as ever. Suited they might have been to the Turkish men, with whom they originated, but not at all to the well-formed woman of good carriage with no defects to conceal.

Also, we have the pelerine, fringe and all. Made up in pretty colored silks or in black or white, with gayly colored borders, as many of them are, they suggest the most delightful combing Jackals.

Seriously, it does seem rather a pity that our straight, figure woman, who can tramp all day over an 18-hole golf course and dance till the

INDICATIONS OF THE REDINGOTE EFFECT IN THIS.

A very dressy toilette is achieved by the use of an overdress of buff taffeta over a gown of cream allover lace. The silk is in open coat and skirt effect, suggestive of the redingote that is promised us this fall. The lace waist blouses softly, while the silk portion is slashed front and back, quite cut away in the neck and waistline to disclose the blouse beneath. The skirt buttons in front and is cut to show the lace petticoat beneath. The buttons and buttonholes are distinctively a feature of this costume, the former being of silver and black satin. The only remaining blacktouch of the costume is the black velvet.

COLOR SILK COAT FOR WEAR WITH WHITE DRESSES.

The little colored taffeta coats are extremely popular, and the illustration is one of the latest and best of the season's models. This falls free from the bustline in front, and the back would be quite loose were it not for the fact that little pucker is taken in the silk about four inches above the normal waistline, caught in with tiny rosettes, giving the short-waisted empire effect. This coat does not meet in front. A novel effect is secured by finishing the armholes with a soutache and hand embroidery which decorates the sleeves of the coat, and then slipping the sleeve in under, instead of sewing it in the usual fashion. Small pointed cuffs are embroidered, as are the long fronts of the coat. The lining gown shown with this is embroidered and inset with Val. insertions, the whole hand wrought.

"two sma' hours" without fatigue, should wrap herself in one of these shapeless pieces of material. But perhaps when the new wears off we shall look upon them with greater leniency, for certainly our grandmothers thought them exceedingly smart.

It must be added in the name of justice that when these old-new wraps are of the gown material they are less conspicuously ugly, as was one of pink chambray, made with a peplum and shirred at the back, blousing at the front and turned back in revers faced with white all over embroidery of an exquisite pattern. Some of these are unlined but usually they show some pretty figured material or a dainty contrasting one.

In Women's World.

There should always be books in a bedroom, where many quiet moments may be spent. When a difference arises, or being ushered into the guest's room at the commencement of a visit, if a few well-chosen books smile a welcome, and how their presence helps toward the desirable condition of "feeling oneself at home!" At the same time a book in a bedroom should have a look to themselves, and not trespass on the table of one's clothes and the process of putting them on. In the bedroom sketch it is shown how an enticing book cupboard may be planned so as to take up a foot of floor space, while it forms an appreciable addition to the comfort of the room. A small, not very useful cupboard built into the wall, of the kind so often found in houses of 40 or 50 years ago, was turned to account with the result desired. The doors were taken away, the shelves fitted more closely together, and, to and behold, a niche wherein to construe a plentiful supply of literature, grave and gay, the light reading for a tired hour, or the "work" for serious study. By the luck of chance the niche in this instance happens to be between the bed head and the fireplace, equally well placed for both; so a small shelf was devised to pull out between the book shelves and the curtain of the bed, and the book was turned to serve as a foot of floor space, or electric reading lamp during wakeful hours, or in that pleasant lull in the day, the half-hour before dressing for dinner, which it is so restful to while away with an amusing book over one's bedroom fire, if only the book, the

CLUB CHAT.

The week has been marked by the reopening of many of the larger clubs, the Ladies' Literary having its first general meeting yesterday. A program of unusual interest was provided, in the way of an address by the new president, Miss Ethel Paul, and a talk by Mrs. A. T.
